University of Washington Tacoma Site Selection

Tacoma, Washington

The introduction captivated the University of Washington...

Merritt was a member of a local citizen group in Tacoma that initially introduced the area near Tacoma Union Station to the University of Washington as a possible site for their new Tacoma Campus.

The presentation included demographics, real estate issues, transportation/circulation, and campus concept designs. Merritt presented six approaches to the campus layout from an urban campus to a "quad" campus with a number of variations in between.

The introduction captivated the University, which ultimately selected the area as the site of the campus.

